THE UNIQUE GUIDE TO 1100+ WEB TRAVEL SITES

W E L C O M E

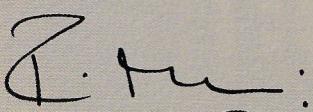

Informed decisions on travel as never before is what we are promised. Yet how do we find what we want quickly and easily without spending hours on-line sending the telephone bill through the roof? Furthermore, how can we be sure we have located most, if not all, of the desired information?

/travmag/ is the world's first magazine dedicated to hotel and travel information on the Internet. It bridges the gap between the traditional means of sourcing information and the data available on the World Wide Web. This special Directory issue will give you the start you need to find what you want.

In the months to come, we will be running detailed features on every aspect of business travel and leisure travel, including hotels, conferences and exhibitions, holidays and short breaks.

As well as providing the authoritative guide for everyone searching for travel related information on the Internet, each issue contains interesting features on destinations together with useful information on products and services available to you. It is both an important reference tool and an interesting read. And don't forget the great prizes on offer.

We hope your experience is an enjoyable one and that /travmag/ makes your relationship with the Internet fruitful and trouble-free.

Introducing /travmag/

[/travmag/ off-line]

/travmag/ off-line is the world's first off-line travel magazine dedicated to issues affecting the traveller and the travel world on the World Wide Web. The magazine includes:

- a unique directory of over 1100 web travel sites providing an oversight of what is available and where you will find it.
- informative destination features, all the time relating aspects of travel to relevant sites on the Internet.
- news on the comings and goings in the Internet travel world.
- other on-line information services (such as Tel-Me) are also covered
- prize draws and competitions abound in this truly interactive magazine.

/travmag/ on-line is there to support you when you are up on the Net and is ideal for use as a regular gateway and home base for your on-line travels. It includes:

- a directory of Internet sites with hyperlinks.
- a slot for you to share your tips on interesting travel sites with fellow travellers. You can also ask questions here and have them answered on the Net.
- an email help line into /travmag/ for more pressing enquiries.
- a regular survey on travel activities and interests on the Internet
- news as it breaks on all travel related issues on the Net.
- direct links into major travel hubs and top travel companies

/travmag/ is published by MaxMedia Publishing, The Barley Mow Centre, 10 Barley Mow Passage, London W4 4PH

How to get Connected

The Internet has information sources beyond your wildest dreams. You just need to know where to find them and how to get there. If there is a Cybercafe (a new culture of cafes where, instead of the traditional newspapers, you can sip a beverage and surf the Net) near you, you may prefer to 'try before you buy'. Most of us won't be so lucky and will need to take a plunge. It is worthwhile being bold.

So what do you need and what will it cost? Answer: a PC, a modem, a telephone line and Internet software. However, with PC sales outstripping TV sets since 1994, there is a strong possibility that you already have a suitable PC. You can get Tel-Me on-line software (see pages 16-18) and a special 14.4 kbps FastConnect modem for £99.95 - less than the price of a standard modem. For the full Internet package, see the back page. Otherwise, to get connected just to the Net will be approximately £20 set up and £10 per month thereafter.

Once installed, you have access to the World Wide Web (the commercial showcase of the Internet), email (electronic mail, which is much cheaper than the phone or fax), you can download files from other computers (FTP) and access remote databases (Telnet) as well as carry on a conversation on-line with one person (Internet Relay Chat) or exchange useful information with groups with similar interests (Newsgroups).

You can imagine the excitement when you're ready to go! There will usually be a help line to call, so you're not alone. To get on to the Net, you have to establish contact with your access provider's server via your fax modem. Once the connection is established, start up your Internet browser (eg Mosaic or Netscape). You're on-line!

What next? Our recommendation is to head straight for /travmag/ on-line at <http://www.demon.co.uk/travmag/> where, apart from the wealth of travel information, we have established links with the main search engines (or robots) on the Web. Click on any of these, and enter words or terms for which you wish to search. What you will find depends entirely on how thoroughly a company or organisation has registered their product or service. You may not find what you want from one robot, but don't give up. Try another. When you have found a site that you like and may want again, bookmark it, using the menu at the top of your screen.

Try out each search engine to find the one you like best. In response to a search, you will generally receive some information which bears little relevance to your enquiry. But by using several engines, and the on-line and off-line services of /travmag/, you are likely to achieve a reasonable level of success.

At /travmag/ we have collected site information on every aspect of travel. On a regular basis new sites appear and some move or even disappear. We will track these developments for you and do our utmost to supply you with the most up-to-date and organised information available on the subject of travel on the Internet. Your own input via the on-line form is vital to this success and would be very much appreciated.

By now, you should be up and running and gaining confidence rapidly. However, should you ever get stuck when you're on-line or if you have found a solution to a problem that you would like to share with fellow /travmag/ readers, leave a message on the /travmag/ bulletin board. If your problem is more serious, contact the /travmag/ help-line, who will be pleased to assist.

Using the Internet can be great fun. Knowing where you are going makes it even better. You have the technology, and soon you will have the knowledge.

/TRAVMAG/ DIRECTORY

The /travmag/ Directory is designed for easy oversight and quick reference, providing you with the basic material to explore the Internet travel pages for yourself. The Directory will be updated in every issue of /travmag/.

Should you experience difficulties accessing some of the sites listed, we recommend that you refer to /travmag/ on-line at <http://www.demon.co.uk/travmag/>, which provides hyperlinks and an e-mail help-line.

Sites marked + have not been verified recently and sites marked * could not be accessed, although may still be active.

Enjoy your travels!

Draw

Eurostar

Win 2 first class return tickets to Paris with a 3-course meal on board!

Travel from London's Waterloo International to the heart of Paris (3 hours) or Brussels (3 and a quarter hours) and experience true relaxation on your journey, with check-in 20 minutes prior to departure. Eurostar is now even more convenient for travellers in southern England and northern France, with calls at Ashford International's bright new terminal as well as Lille and Calais (Frethun) in France en route.

Mobile phones and laptop computers may be used on-board where payphone facilities are also available.

First Class tickets include a 3-course meal at your seat as well as fax and phone facilities in the Executive Lounge of the terminals. On standard tariff you may use the excellent buffet car on board.

Future plans include direct services from Glasgow, Edinburgh, Manchester and the West Country, all of which will by-pass London. In 1997 a night service will be extended to reach Amsterdam as well as Frankfurt, Cologne and other German cities.

Travel by Eurostar is convenient to book through your travel agent, any large train station, or by calling 0345 881881 from within the UK. Further telephone details are given on the Internet at <http://www.eurostar.com/eurostar/>

...but will the Internet Tel-Me?

by Roger Macdonald

The relationship between the Internet and the so-called information superhighway seems precariously similar to that between doctor and patient in 18th century medicine: the treatment may be worse than the disease. The only consolation for Internet users is that the consequences are unlikely to be fatal, as confusion and frustration are not yet considered life-threatening illnesses with no known cure.

While the Internet, like medicine, is constantly pushing out the frontiers of knowledge, it is just as much a victim of resources. Even those of us convinced of its immense benefits and potential recognise that the Internet alone cannot guarantee to solve the problem of immediate access to relevant information, still less how to turn that information to advantage. The Internet threatens to become the electronic equivalent of the chain letter, relying on its own momentum, profitable for a few, but by any rational assessment capable of breaking down at any moment. More than 34 million people world-wide have access to information services over the Internet and usage is growing at a rate of more than 10% per month. When the promised increase in bandwidth comes to fruition, it may never catch up with the almost insatiable demand.

If this seems too gloomy a view, just try using the Internet at peak hours (after the USA wakes up) in the evenings and weekends. For every successful site access, resign yourself to a long wait both to get on line and to reach your intended destination. The potential savings in off-peak telephony charges often prove negligible when the bill arrives. When connection and on-line charges are taken fully into account, the myth of the Internet as a 'free' ride on the superhighway is rapidly dispelled.

Of course, the speed at which answers to travel enquiries are received depends on the processing power of your computer and the choice of communications. The Tel-Me service is completely independent of any communications network. Unlike other on-line services with their own networks, it has no vested interest in keeping users connected as long as possible.

Tel-Me compliments the Internet: it is not in competition with it.

A Tel-Me subscriber with a direct leased line to the Internet (e.g. from Pipex Dial) can access these Tel-Me travel services via the Internet with no requirement for additional communications equipment.

WHY TEL-ME?

Tel-Me is superior to other on-line information services:

- 1.Tel-Me responds much more quickly, not so much on-line, as "hardly on-line". Most answers are displayed on screen within a few seconds of the customer sending the enquiry, including the time taken to dial up and connect to the service. In some cases you receive the answer before you have finished asking the question! This is achieved through a technique known as "predictive data query" whereby the computer recognises the minimum amount of data needed to initiate an enquiry, sends it, receives and displays the answer, while the user is still typing in additional data. This technique has been used previously for the retrieval of data held locally, but not for the retrieval of data from a remote database.
- 2.Tel-Me is just as fast however many people use it simultaneously. The system is built to process 2,000 enquiries a second, over 100,000 a minute. This is as large as Minitel in France and far larger than other systems (for example more than 50 times the size of Prestel, which was built to handle around 2,000 enquiries a minute). BT has provided fibre optic links with an 8,000 telephone line capacity (the size of a small town's network) to PhoneLink's centre in Birkenhead.
- 3.Tel-Me is easier to use than any other on-line information service. The user interface (how the customer enters the enquiry and the way the result is displayed) is the same for each service. It takes only a few minutes to learn how to use one service, and when you can use one, you can use them all.
- 4.Tel-Me hosts the data it provides. For speed of operation each database (with the exception of BT telephone numbers) is held on PhoneLink's own computers at Birkenhead. Many Tel-Me databases such as the Ordnance Survey digital mapping, and Thomsens' classified directories, are available on-line only through Tel-Me.
- 5.Tel-Me uses a unique combination of hardware and software in the 3 elements that make up the system: the PC software, the proprietary engines that host the data, and the communications that link the two together.
- 6.Tel-Me provides a special FastConnect modem which bypasses the normal connectivity (i.e. 35 seconds to complete the 'handshake' with the modem at the other end of the communications chain) for immediate access.

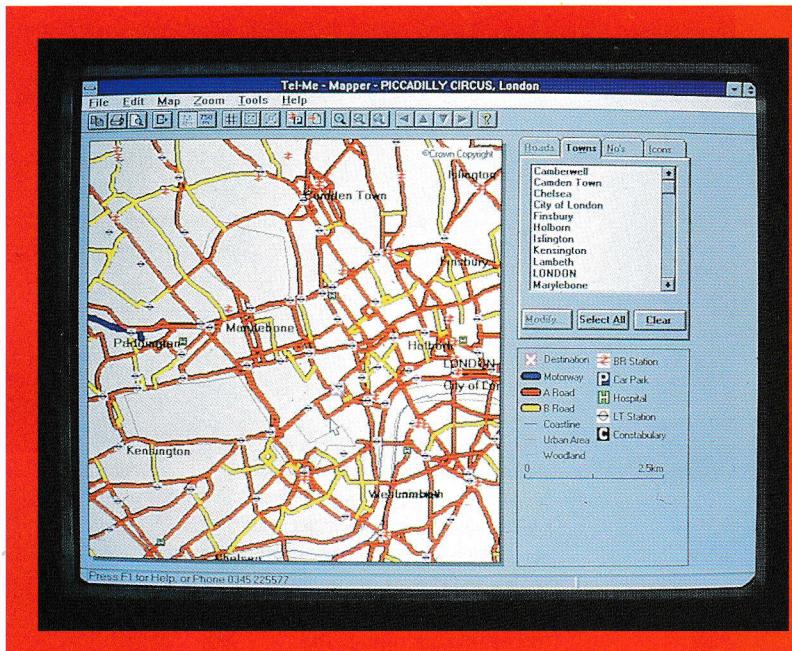

The invention of the FastConnect modem, the brainchild of Tel-Me's creator, Trevor Burke, of course makes it as quick and cheap to dial Tel-Me direct as to dial the nearest Internet node or Point of Presence (POP). Using a FastConnect modem and standard telephony, PhoneLink aims to provide answers on Tel-Me within one BT charging unit of 4.1p. At peak times, using Tel-Me via the Internet will almost certainly be slower and more expensive.

The ideal solution, for those who want vital travel data instantly as well as the astonishing range of useful background travel information on the Internet, is to combine the two. Tel-Me is available combined with a full Internet connection provided by Pipex Dial. The package includes Tel-Me software, Pipex software, and the latest Tel-Me 28.8 kbps FastConnect Modem, which can also be used for all normal PC fax and data transfer applications (for details, see the back page of this issue of /travmag/).

BOOKING VIA THE INTERNET

The Internet is a prodigious source of information but as a potential electronic shopping mall, it still has severe limitations. For example, although the unique /travmag/ directory includes a number of Web sites that offer a reservation facility, using the Internet to make bookings can be frustrating. It is far from risk-free and sometimes not cost-effective. There are a number of reasons:

First it is by no means obvious to the user which Web sites are connected to real-time reservation systems. Unless the booking made on the Internet actually removes, say, the airline seat or hotel room from the space available in the appropriate electronic inventory, the Internet user has no guaranteed reservation. There have already been reports of Internet users being overbooked on flights or at hotels and finding themselves at a disadvantage in comparison with travellers arriving at the airport or the hotel reception with the correct documentation obtained by traditional methods.

Second, although advance payment by credit card is almost essential to book on the Net, Internet users remain reluctant to enter credit card details. Their concern may not be entirely justified; yet a credit card company might very well consider an Internet entry the hyperspace equivalent of recklessly repeating one's card number in a crowded street and make the card holder liable in full for any abuse. As a result, some Web sites direct the user to a telephone number to confirm payment, which often makes the initial access via the Internet almost meaningless.

Third, there is no guarantee that Internet users will receive the best price for a flight to a particular destination, for a hotel room, or even for a package tour. Making price comparisons on the Internet, even where the various travel service providers are all represented, is extremely laborious. The Internet is no different from any other advertising medium for travel, in that advertisers are hardly obliged to draw to the attention of a potential customer that a better price for the same or comparable service is available elsewhere. For example, different prices for an identical charter flight may be displayed on different Web sites. Late availability, with correspondingly lower prices, is sometimes difficult to find on the Internet.

None of these disadvantages will apply on Tel-Me, which is already directly connected to one of the four big travel computerised reservation systems (CRS), WORLDSPAN, owned by a powerful consortium of airlines, including Delta, TWA and Cathay Pacific. Tel-Me subscribers will shortly be able to access the world-wide schedules of hundreds of airlines, with the responses driven by near real-time seat availability. Soon afterwards, they will be able to price and book complete itineraries. Reservations will be automatically confirmed by the CRS at the point of booking and queued to a WORLDSPAN travel agent of their choice for ticketing.

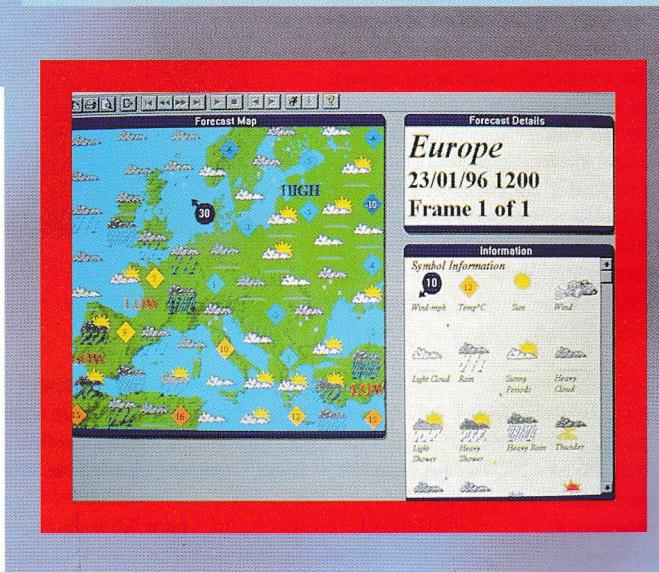

PhoneLink plans to introduce displays on Tel-Me of discounted scheduled air fares, charter flights, and late availability for package holidays, in each case with an electronic reservation facility. In due course it will also be possible to use Tel-Me to book electronically rail tickets and seats, hotel rooms and car rental. The prices quoted on screen will be extremely competitive.

Many travel companies remain unconvinced that the Internet in isolation is an effective means of electronic trading, not just to the Internet 'community' but also from business to business. As the Internet is probably the closest we will ever come to a truly open platform, it is almost impossible for, say, a tour operator to establish brand loyalty on the Internet when a competitor's Web site is only a key press or two away. This raises the spectre already haunting the travel industry: of businesses competing only on price, lacking any customer loyalty, with a spiral of reduced profits followed by a reduction in choice.

These problems are accentuated by the proliferation of solutions to navigating the net, perpetuating the learning curve and delaying the moment when customers make a purchasing decision. Owning a Web site is not in itself a solution, as the construction and maintenance of sites is expensive. The return on investment from a Web site is difficult to predict, as the large audience promised by the Internet is still not necessarily a profitable customer base. The merchandising capability of the Internet remains, for the present, very limited.

In travel, as in most other service industries, electronic trading is however almost certain to become the norm. As encouraging existing customers to trade over the Internet simply exposes them to competitive pressure from alternative web sites, another solution must be found. It will certainly involve the customisation of travel products online to suit the needs of individual customers as a means of re-establishing customer loyalty. Using its Tel-Me technology, PhoneLink is providing an integrated solution: direct electronic links combined with applications tailored to specific customer requirements, and embracing the Internet as an additional route to a new customer base.

This offers the exciting possibility of the limitless electronic Tel-Me travel brochure, that can be surfed from tailored page to tailored page and the holiday of your choice booked at the touch of a button. Contrast that with the present, where the UK industry spends some £50 million on printed brochures every year. The average family comes out of their local travel agent clutching half a dozen brochures, still faced with a choice from anything up to 5,000 hotels. It will take Tel-Me and the Internet combined to provide the integrated alternative to selling holidays in bulk by existing methods, which even the most blinkered travel executive must agree are scarcely a shining example of precision marketing at its best.

Can 872 companies be wrong?

by Paul Richer, Genesys

There are 872 travel companies marketing and selling their wares on the World Wide Web (WWW) according to Yahoo, the well known WWW search directory. When Genesys, a management consultancy that specialises in advising travel companies, conducted a similar survey last June, it counted 561 companies. The total consists of 267 travel agents, 285 tour operators, 229 hotels and lodging groups, 68 airlines and 23 car rental companies, and all are planning to gain some commercial advantage by using the Internet to promote their products and services.

Attempting to access some sites, however, can be frustrating in the extreme. You expect wonderful graphics and informative text to arrive on your screen any second: but the seconds turn into minutes and you are still waiting. This is not necessarily a problem with the Internet per se, but rather caused by site providers running their applications on computer servers that are just too small to offer an acceptable performance to the number of users accessing their system.

The WWW has not yet been truly subjected to the commercial pressures that I believe will see it mature and develop into a user friendly, commonplace tool. Cyberspace will evolve as a result of market forces.

Those companies offering the fastest, most efficient service will be the ones that will gain our custom and, as the choice of companies and products available widens, so will the Internet become more reliable.

Those that offer an erratic, inefficient service will be bypassed.

Of all the products and services on offer on the Internet, travel is set to become one of the most widely promoted sectors. The WWW gives you a chance to see and learn about the product you will eventually use in a way not otherwise possible.

Visit the American Airlines site and use the seat plans to select where you would like to sit in their aircraft:

http://www.amrcorp.com/aa_home/aa_home.htm.

See the extensive search facilities on TravelWeb that enable you to locate the hotel that precisely matches your needs and then see some photos of it: <http://www.travelweb.com/thisco/global/travel.html>. In future issues of /travmag/, we will be giving various aspects of buying travel on the Internet.

If you have an issue that you believe needs assessing or have a particular view we would like to hear from you. You can reach us via e-mail on paul@travmag.demon.co.uk . We look forward to hearing from you.

NEWS

[FARE WARS CU CRUISING]

The American Electronics Association Credit Union's travel department is offering an additional 20-25% discount on ANY fare offered by a major US scheduled airline, on services to 60 US cities and 13 European cities. The discounts are effective during 1996 & 1997 and apply to ALL published fares: "fare war" fares, supersaver, APEX, coach, business and first class. No dates are excluded: it is valid all the year round. For details see:
<http://www.cucruising.com/cu/> OR email your itinerary with exact dates to: jerry@cucruising.com. It costs nothing to join and offers full frequent flier credit.

[THE BIRCH HOTEL GATWICK]

The Birch Hotel in Haywards Heath is now bookable via the Internet. This quiet country house hotel is ideally located 20 miles from London's Gatwick Airport and just 40 minutes by train from the centre of London. It is located at <http://www.demon.co.uk/travmag/for/lgbirch>

[BRITISH MIDLAND]

BM claims to be the first airline in the world to provide a reservation booking service with payment on the Internet. This new service is officially known as CyberSeat and is supported by full on-line information.

[FORTE]

Just before it was taken over by Granada, Forte Hotels put its Travelodge product on the Web, with a very well-designed site at <http://www.forte.travelodge.com/index>, including e-mail reservations facility.

[/TRAVMAG/ SURVEY]

An on-line survey conducted through two separate World Wide Web sites shows that almost half of all Net-users accessed the Internet at work. Most used the Internet to source information only (68%), predominantly destinations worldwide, usually on holidays (82%). Most (90%) of respondents were male, in the 30-40 age bracket. They considered that between a quarter and a half of their time on the Net, looking for an information source, was unproductive.

Search engines naturally helped, and WebCrawler was the most popular, with TravelWeb the preferred travel gateway.
